The Proprietors return their Thanks to the Gentleman who has favoured them with this List it being the most correct they have ever seen: but as it is almost impossible for Matters of this Nature to be entirely free from Error, they would esteem any Insertions or Corrections a singular Obligation.

A SHORT ACCOUNT OF THE LIFE OF
S E L I N A,

Countess Dowager of Huntingdon.

THIS very pious and eminently distinguished lady was born on the 13th day of August, in the year 1707. She was the second daughter, and one of the three co-heiresses of Warrington, second Earl Ferrers.

She married on the 3d of June, 1728, Theophilus Earl of Huntingdon, and had issue by him four sons and three daughters, of whom the Countess of Moira is the only survivor. The Earl died in the year 1746; and she continued a widow till her death, a period of forty-five years.

The first serious thoughts which took hold of her conscience, arose from a simple circumstance during the Earl of Huntingdon's life. She had made a promise of some present to her housekeeper, but forgot to fulfil it; the person being gone from the family, she could not find means to make her promise good; this made a wound in her conscience, and convictions of sin increased; light from the Word and Spirit of God discovered to her the nature of human depravity; she saw and felt herself nothing but sin, and the want of that change of heart, which she could not effect, and without which she knew her destruction was inevitable. In this state of mind, when her table has been graced with the presence of many noble persons, and some prelates, she has started the subject of religion; has asked the bishops the meaning of one passage of scripture and another, which has been waved; or if an answer hath been given, it has increased her trouble, but not resolved her doubts.

The Countess of Huntingdon, in conjunction with the celebrated George Whitefield, contributed greatly towards the establishment of the Orphan House Charity in America; and by her will she appointed the Earl of Dartmouth and Sir Richard Hill two of the trustees to that charity.

Her Ladyship founded a college at Trevecka * in Wales, where, by her munificence and bounty, a great number of gospel ministers have received their pulpit education; several of whom, so great was their zeal for the propagation of the gospel, have consented to leave their native country, and have traversed many of the dreary parts of North America, among various Indian nations, preaching CHRIST and him crucified, to those inhabitants of the earth who never before heard of his name.

In the year 1779 the Countess purchased the chapel in the Spa Fields of Mess. Mabberley and Mackenzie, (which was built by Mr. Craven, and called the Pantheon, for the amusement of the citizens of London, and the inhabitants of its suburbs,) and converted it from a rendezvous of iniquity to a house of prayer.

In November, 1790, her ladyship had the misfortune to break a blood vessel, and this was the commencement of her illness. She recovered, in some slight degree, from this indisposition, so as not to be perpetually confined to her chamber. However, a few days before her last illness, which took place in June, 1791, she broke out in the following energetic expression: "The LORD hath been present with my spirit this morning in a remarkable manner: what he means to convey to my mind I know not; it may be, my approaching departure; my soul is filled with glory; I am as in the element of heaven itself." About two hours before her death she said to her physician, Doctor, I am going to my Father—I am going to my Heavenly Father—I am going to my Heavenly Father this night;" and soon after, the spirit of that extraordinary female character in the church of God, fled to the bosom of its MAKER. O, my readers! would to God, that the same spirit may be in us which was in her, that we may be enabled to exclaim, with the same calmness and serenity of mind, that the LORD hath been present with us in a remarkable manner; and that our souls be filled with glory.

To return, her Ladyship was greatly weakened by a complication of disorders; and, though enfeebled by age, yet the vigour of her mind, and her intellectual faculties, were as bright and as clear as at any period of her life. She was exceedingly anxious that missionaries should be sent to *Otaheite, with a view to convert the natives of that

* Otaheite is one of the Society Isles in the South Sea. These islands lie in 18 deg. of south lat. and 150 deg. of west long. They were first discovered by Capt. Wallis in 1767, who that island to christianity. In short, the advancement of the kingdom of CHRIST, in every part of the world, occupied all her thoughts.

The pains which she endured, in the course of her illness, made her not in the least impatient, but she appeared to be much more concerned for the welfare of those who attended her, than for herself. She resigned her soul into the hands of her CREATOR on the 17th of June, 1791, and in the 84th year of her age.

Her Ladyship, as abovesaid, had remained a widow forty-five years; and so long has a fine bust of her, by Kent, been placed on the tomb of her deceased Lord, at Abbey de la Zouch, in the county of Leicester, where, by her will, she directed that her own remains might be deposited, in as plain a manner as possible. She was buried in a suit of white satin.

Her very great religious concerns in these kingdoms, were deputed to the management of committees. Her unbounded benevolence bore the best testimony of the purity of her intentions, having in the course of her life, expended above a hundred thousand pounds in public and private acts of charity. And by her will it appears, that her Ladyship has bequeathed a considerable sum of money towards the support of sixty-four chapels, which she had established throughout the kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland.

who gave the name of George the Third's Island to that which is now called Otaheite. Capt. Cook, the celebrated circumnavigator, arrived here in 1769. The natives are brave, open, and generous, without suspicion or treachery. They live in perfect simplicity, and seem incapable of harbouring deliberate revenge.

ZION'S COMPLAINT and CONSOLATION.

Written on the much-lamented Death of the Right Hon.

SELINA,

COUNTESS DOWAGER OF HUNTINGDON.

ZION, alas! why all this storm of grief?
Thy head thus drooping, why refuse relief?
The fountains whence those briny torrents roll,
Fill'd by the inward anguish of thy soul.

Alas! my friend, and patroness, no more;
Selina gone, shall I not thus deplore?
Beneath her soft'ring hand I daily thriv'd;
Religion's sinking interest's reviv'd:
New altars rear'd, JEHOVAH now address,
By those who were his enemies profess!
Where'er she mov'd, diffus'd a genial ray?
Dispelling darkness with a Gospel Day!
The harden'd collier *—moral and prophane,
Melt in the beams, and happiness attain!
The brute no more—reason her throne assumes,
And all the soul to harmony attunes!

Cambria, do thou attest what pious care
My sons did for the gospel-field prepare;
Who nobly stood the shocks of earth and hell;
While Satan's Kingdom 'fore those champions fell.

Nor circumscrib'd within the British shore,
But by the vast Atlantic wafted o'er
To western climes, they spread the Gospel sound;
With Gospel converts, western climes abound.

Fifty

* Alluding to her Chaplain's (Mr. George Whitfield) success at Kingswood in preaching the Gospel to the colliers.

Fifty revolving years, she stood the shock,
 Of court disdain and slander, like a rock !
 Nobly prefer'd her MASTER's thorny crown ;
 And trod the world and fading honours down.
 Hast thou, O Sun ! throughout thy annual round
 So great a candidate for JESUS found ?
 Or have thy cheering beams illumin'd one
 Of her own sex that's half her service done ?
 Higher than earth, and far beyond the tomb,
 Her soul aspir'd ; nor could the thickest gloom
 Of adverse Providence, or pain affright ;
 Through shades her eagle eye beheld the light.

The weary traveller, who throughout the day
 Ne'er felt the sons invigorating ray ;
 Relentless winds his shatter'd garments spread,
 And storms discharge their fury on his head :
 His fainting limbs beneath their charge decline,
 Each sense, about its office to resign ;
 Nor tree, nor shrub, nor spring, afford him cheer,
 Nor house delight his eyes, nor voice his ear ;
 Sudden the ev'ning beams revive his eyes,
 Sudden the unexpected prospects rise !
 With sweet amazement sees the long sought dome,
 And bounds invigor'd to his native home.
 Thus Zion's friend approach'd the eternal state ;
 Her soul with joy ineffable elate !
 Each hour drank immortality and love ;
 Breathing the air of Providence above !
 Not fearing stingless death, her weary head
 " Reclin'd to rest in Nature's common bed."
 Such Zion's friend—can she her tears refrain ?
 So deep a wound, nor feel a throbbing pain ?

As sparks ascend mankind's to trouble born ;
 Why grasp the joys from which we must be torn ?
 Thro' all the maze of sorrow, toil, and pain,
 The Hand of Heaven shall carefully sustain :

Tho'

Tho' Israel's Mother from her offspring flies,
 Jesus the God of Israel never dies.
 Zion lamented her ascended Lord;
 The PARACLETE's descent her joys restor'd.
 If as his right, he takes his own away;
 'Tis but with ampler blessings to repay!
 Thy loss, Selina's everlasting gain;
 Subject no more to infirmity, or pain.
 But in immortal youth and beauty blooms;
 Celestial dignity her form assumes!
 Admiring Seraphs on her steps attend;
 Inferior orders, round her radiance bend!
 Uniting voice and harp in tuneful band,
 Welcome Selina to her native land!

Zion, can'st thou not yet thy tears forbear?
 Jesus thy friend participates thy care:
 He soothes thy sorrows, bids thine anguish cease,
The Friend of Zion is the PRINCE OF PEACE.
 L. J. A.

PART of the FORTY-THIRD CHAPTER of ECCLESIASTICUS paraphrased.

O! POWER SUPREME! O! high above all height!
 Thou gav'st the Sun to shine, and thou art Light!
 Whether he falls or rises in the skies,
 He by thy voice is taught to fall or rise;
 Swiftly he moves, refulgent in his sphere,
 And measures out the day, the month, and year;
 He drives the hours along with slower pace,
 The minutes rush impetuous in their race:
 He wakes the flowers that sleep within the earth,
 And calls the fragrant infants out to birth;
 The fragrant infants paint th' enamel'd vales,
 And native incense loads the balmy gales;
 The balmy gales the fragrant convey
 To Heav'n, and to their God an offering pay!

SUBLIME FORTITUDE AND PIETY,

Exemplified in the DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH.

ON the morning of the Battle of Blenheim he rose at four o'clock; he went into his coach with his chaplain Dr. Hare: he drew up the windows and they went to prayer: he then received the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper upon his knees: as soon as this act of worship was finished he came out of his coach—mounted his horse—drew his sword, and said—"This day I conquer or die." As soon as the victory was gained he tore a leaf out of his memorandum-book, and wrote with his pencil to his Dukes—"This day we have push'd thirty squadrons of French horse into the Danube—I've taken 13,000 prisoners, and have got Marshal Tallard, the commander in chief of the French army, safe in my coach." With this scrap of paper, and another to the Queen, a courier rode off in full speed. After the campaign was over, the Duke told Dr. Burnet, one day at dinner, that he never saw more of God in his life than he did that day.

POLITE GENEROSITY,

Exemplified in the Conduct of BOILEAU towards Mons. PATRU.

MR. PATRU was a native of the kingdom of France. He had a liberal education given him by his father. He was particularly trained up to plead at the bar, but a violent love to the sciences and a taste for convivial entertainments caused him to neglect his proper business. In short he found his income would not maintain his expences. He softly intimated to some of his dearest friends, that he must sell his library to preserve his honour and pay his debts. This was whispered about in the circles of learned men, till at last it reached the ears of Mr. Boileau, who was at once the richest and best poet of the kingdom of France. Mr. Boileau waited on Mr. Patru: after mutual compliments, he said—"Sir, I understand you want to sell your library?"—"Yes, Sir, (replied he) I must sell my library to preserve my honour."—"Well, Sir, and what is the price?"—"The price, Sir, is so many thousand livres *."—"Sir, replied Mr. Boileau, I'll give you that and half as much more †. There's the money, Sir," (telling it down upon the table.)—"Well, Sir, said Mr. Patru, when shall I deliver the books?"—"When you are dead, Sir, and till then they are all your own."—He took a genteel leave, and left Patru full of gratitude and admiration.

GENEROSITY in a FRENCH BOY.

 "Sir, I have a brother just dead, and likewise his wife. She has left four children, and the youngest is but eight months old. Myself and my two brothers have agreed to take each of us a child a-piece, but we do not know what to do with the poor infant. We know not how to nurse him, nor can we afford to maintain him." "Why then, he must go upon the parish," says the unfeeling priest. Upon this the young nobleman of thirteen years of age took fire---"What, Sir, is my father able to maintain this great castle, and not able to maintain a poor infant? Besides, he allows me eight Louis D'Or a year for my pocket-money, and the poor boy shall have all that. Sir, will you give me leave to go along with this poor man?" Yes, Sir. Away they went about two miles. When they came to the cottage, they found the poor infant in the cradle. He stretched out his two little hands, and smiled in the young nobleman's face. "Take him up," said he to the labourer. When they were got very near his father's castle, he called at an honest country-woman's house, "here," said he, good woman, take this child, and bring it up for me. I will pay you punctually for your trouble.

RUSTIC GENEROSITY,

In an EMPEROR OF RUSSIA, Predecessor to

PETER THE GREAT.

THE emperor Ivan was a man of genius and humour, though not polished by a good education, which was not known in that savage empire. He loved frequently to dress himself like a beggar, and ramble ten or twenty miles round Moscow, for Petersburg was not then built. One day when he was out upon his rambles, appearing in most miserable rags, he went mumping and begging around the whole village, and could get nothing from those cruel savages. At last, at the skirts of the town, he knocks at a poor man's door. The poor labourer rose and let him in; he made grievous complaints as though he was starved to death. Come into this back room, says the poor fellow, I will get you something to eat. Accordingly he prepared him some boiled eggs, and some coarse black bread. "Here, says he, is the best victuals I can get, for I am but a day-labourer, and I have got four or five chubby children, and my wife is like to give me another. Her mother is with her, and I expect every minute the joyful event" In about an hour the poor fellow stepped out and brought in a brave thumping boy---"Here, said he, see what God Almighty has given me." The Emperor was astonished at the fellow's cheerfulness, and as he was weary, he laid himself down upon a bed of straw, wrapt up in a piece of coarse cloth, but he could not sleep for wonder and astonishment. But the poor fellow went to bed and slept heartily. In the morning, before he went out to work, the beggar said to him, "Honest Friend, do put off the christening of your child till the afternoon, I will go to Moscow, and try to procure some rich friend to stand as surety to your child." The poor man did not pay much regard to a beggar in rags, however he waited till near two o'clock, when all on a sudden a great noise was heard at his door, he looks out and sees some soldiers with their swords drawn on their prancing horses; immediately up comes the royal coach, the door flies open, out steps the Emperor in his royal robes, "Come honest fellow, says he, I am that beggar that lay at thy house last night, give me the child, and let us go to church, I'll stand surety to it." FILIAL PIETY CONQUERS ALL THINGS, Exemplified in the Case of a Young Man of France.

A Shopkeeper in the kingdom of France, who lived two or three days journey from Paris, preserved his good conduct and integrity for many years. At last, by some persons taking undue credit, and keeping him too long out of his money, he was obliged to take a journey to Paris, to desire two things of his creditors: the one was a lengthening out their forbearance, and the other was, to be furnished with a fresh assortment of goods, that he might keep open his shop with credit; they were so pleased with the honesty and frankness of the man, that they all agreed to grant his request except one. He was his chief creditor, a proud and haughty merchant, who had never felt any adversity, and knew not how to sympathize with the afflicted. "So, says he, I find by your asking for a prolongation of credit, and a further indulgence of goods, that you are going down hill, and therefore I am resolved to have my money. Accordingly he sent immediately for an officer, who arrested the poor man, and carried him to jail. In this distressful situation he wrote home to his wife, who communicated the bad news to her six children: they were all drowned in tears, and overwhelmed in sorrow. What could be done? To sit still in despair was the ready way to ruin. After a deliberate consultation with her eldest son, a young man of fine sense and excellent virtue, about nineteen years of age, he resolved to fly to Paris, with a view to soften this cruel creditor. After a short interview with his father, he went to the house of the merchant, sent in his name, and desired an audience. The cruel haughty man, thinking he was come to pay him, admitted him into his presence; but he soon found that his first request was, that he would release his father from jail, to go home to comfort his mother, and keep up the credit of the shop. The merchant being disappointed in his expectation, flew into a violent passion, and declared he would have the money or the bones of his father. The young man finding him inexorable, fell down upon his knees, and with lifted-up hands, and tears rolling down his cheeks, he addressed himself to the merchant in this manner:—"Sir, said he, if I go home without my father, I shall see my mother die with a broken heart, the credit of the shop will be entirely ruined, and we the poor children must be turned as vagabonds and beggars into the open street. I have therefore this one, this last request to make—Let me be sent to jail in the room of my father, and keep me there till all your demands are satisfied. The merchant walked backwards and forwards in the room with great emotion. The young man continued his cries and entreaties on his knees. At last the merchant flew to him with great tenderness and, took hold of his hand—"Rise, young man, says he, I have but one daughter in the world for whose happiness I am concerned, I'll give thee my daughter—She must be happy with a fellow of thy virtue.—I'll settle upon you all my fortune, I'll release your father out of prison, and make you all happy together."—And he was as good as his word.

GENEROUS FORGIVENESS

Will conquer the strongest Opposition, and produce the most lively Attachment, exemplified in the Conduct of Sir GUY CARLETON towards a rich Man of MONTREAL.

WHEN the quarrel first broke out between the English and America, Montgomery, a boiling young fellow, and full of the spirit of enterprize, flew to the new-formed congress.—“Gentlemen, said he, if you will give me six thousand men, and proper provisions for the business, I’ll set off in the winter time for Quebec, I’ll scale the walls—take General Carleton by surprise—make his soldiers prisoners—take all Canada, and then we shall make better terms with the British Parliament.” The Congress agreed to his proposals. He crossed the lakes, and made as much haste as the difficulty of the way would allow. Sir Guy Carleton was a man of ten thousand eyes. He was not to be taken unawares. He was a cool, active, worthy governor. He had his spies all about him, and far and near into the country. He took care to discipline his troops, and place them in proper positions in the different parts of the city of Quebec. Montgomery came up, and was allowed to scale the outward wall. When he was mounting the second wall he was shot dead: some of his soldiers were killed—some run away—and some were taken prisoners. The second man in command and consequence was a rich Frenchman, who had joined them from Montreal. Officers and men were all put in prison. After they had lain there some time for consideration, General Carleton ordered the Frenchman to make his appearance upon the Parade of the Castle. He was brought there under a file of soldiers. General Carleton was walking at the top of the Parade. As soon as the man was brought in, he waved his hat to the soldiers to retire and shut the gates. An interview must must now take place—let the reader imagine what the Frenchman must feel. He expected to be hanged like a dog, or sent over to England to be tried by the English judges. Up to the General he must come, for it is not to be thought that the General would run towards him. The man summoned up his courage, and walked with a slow dignified step up the Parade towards the General. As soon as he came up to him, he expected nothing but frowns and the most stinging reproaches, as he was one of the King's subjects in the Governor's jurisdiction. The General stopped and looked at him with a mixture of dignity and condescension.—“Sir, said he, when did you hear from your family?”—“General, replied the other, I have not heard from them for three months.” (The General knew that very well, for he had intercepted all his letters.) “Sir, said he, which way do you choose to go home, by land or by water? If you choose to go by water you shall have my barge—if you choose to go by land, you shall ride in my coach.” The Man was struck with amazement, fell down at his feet, and clasping the Governor's knees, he burst out into a violent exclamation—“O General, you are too good! you are too good!”—The General raised him from the ground, sent him home with honour and joy to his family with such gratitude in his heart as never forsook him. He gave the General all the information in his power, and continued a faithful subject as long as he lived.

Had this method been pursued by all the British Generals concerned in the American war, we should have had a very different issue of that bloody and miserable quarrel.

After this gentleman was gone home to Montreal, General Carleton sent for the American soldiers out of prison, in small companies, and addressed them with such sweetness and good-humour as must melt every heart—“My lads, said he, why did you come to disturb an honest man in his government that never did you any harm in his life. I never invaded your property, nor sent a single soldier to distress you. Come, my boys, you are in a very distressful situation, and not able to go home with any comfort, I must provide you with shoes and stockings, and coats, and good warm waistcoats—I must give you some good victuals to carry you home—Take care, my lads, that you don't come here again lest I should not treat you so kindly." The men were all but dead with astonishment; and when they came home they would never lift up a hand against the British forces any more.

This was the only way to conquer North America.

FORTITUDE AGAINST POPERY, and GOD'S VENGEANCE against PERSECUTORS,
*Exemplified in the Glorious Spirit and Conduct of ELIZ.

BLOODY Queen Mary, after she had shed the blood of about eight hundred men in England, had a strong thirst after murdering the Protestants in Ireland. Accordingly she calls her Privy-Council together, and they drew up an order for the President and Lords Justices of Ireland to search after the Protestants, and commit them to prison. Dr. Cole, a civil lawyer, was the man pitched upon to carry this bloody commission. Accordingly he set out on horseback, and his man with him to carry the portmanteau. By proper stages they at last arrived at the White-Lion, in Chester, which was kept by Eliz. Edmunds. She attended Dr. Cole into his chamber. He opened his portmanteau to take out some fresh linen, and amongst other things he took out a leather box—"There, said he, that will do for them." The good woman had some brothers in Ireland that were Protestants: this awakened her suspicion, and roused her her caution, this excited her to look into the box. By the help of her learned friends she found it was a commission to begin a bloody persecution against the Protestants. The brave woman had the fortitude to take away the commission and put in a pack of cards, with the Knave of Clubs uppermost. She put the box into the portmanteau, and left the Doctor to pursue his voyage the first fair wind : As soon as he came to Dublin he summoned the President and Council in the Queen's name to give him the meeting ; accordingly they all met in the Council-Chamber. He told them with great seriousness and solemnity, that he had a commission of great importance from the Queen. Accordingly he pulls his leather box out of his pocket, opens it with great formality and awe, when lo, and behold ! there was a pack of cards, with the Knave of Clubs staring him full in the face ! The man stood astonished and silent ! When he had recovered his surprise, he said—" Gentlemen, I had a commission from the Queen, and how this pack of cards came here I know not." They all burst out a laughing, as there were several of them secret friends to the Protestants. ' Well, Dr. Cole, said the President, we must shuffle and cut the cards whilst you go back and fetch a commission.' Accordingly the Doctor returned, and by the time he got to London, the Queen was dead, and the Commission fell to the ground.

Note.—When Queen Elizabeth came to the crown she was so pleased with Eliz. Edmund's fortitude, that she settled upon her 40l. a year for life.—This is a known fact in the History of England.

JUSTICE and SAGACITY conquering FRAUD and PERJURY.

Exemplified in the Conduct of SIR MATTHEW HALE, Lord Chief Justice of the King's-Bench in the Reign of King CHARLES II.

*Related by the Rev. Mr. ANDERSON.
Late of GRAFTON-STREET.*

A Gentleman of about 500*l.* a year estate, in the eastern part of England, had two sons. The eldest had a rambling disposition. He took a place in a ship and went abroad; after several years his father died. The younger son destroyed his father's will, and seized upon the estate. He gave out that his eldest brother was dead, and bribed some false witnesses, to attest the truth of it. In a course of time, the eldest brother returned; he came home in miserable circumstances. His youngest brother repulsed him with scorn—told him that he was an impostor and a cheat, and asserted that his real brother was dead long ago, and he could bring witnesses to prove it. The poor fellow having neither money nor friends was in a most dismal situation. He went round the parish making bitter complaints, and at last he came to a lawyer; who when he had heard the poor man's mournful story, replied to him in this manner:—"You have nothing to give me: if I undertake your cause and lose it, it will bring me into very foul disgrace, as all the wealth and evidence is on your brother's side. But however I will undertake your cause upon this condition:—You shall enter into obligations to pay me a thousand guineas if I gain the estate for you. If I lose it I know the consequence, and I venture upon it with my eyes open." Accordingly he entered an action against the youngest brother, and it was agreed to be tried at the next general assizes at Chelmsford in Essex.

The

The lawyer having engaged in the cause of the poor man, and stimulated by the prospect of a thousand guineas, set his wits to work to contrive the best methods to gain his end. At last he hit upon this happy thought, that he would consult the first of all judges, Lord Chief Justice Hale. Accordingly he flew up to London, and laid open the cause in all its circumstances. The judge, who was the greatest lover of justice of any man in the world, heard the case patiently and attentively, and promised him all the assistance in his power. (It is very probable that he opened his whole scheme and method of proceeding, enjoining the utmost secrecy.) The judge contrived matters in such a manner as to have finished all his business at the King's-Bench before the assizes begun at Chelmsford, he ordered either his carriage or his horses to convey him down very near the seat of the assizes. He dismissed his man and his horses, and sought out for a single house. He found one occupied by a miller. After some conversation, and making himself quite agreeable, he proposed to the miller to change clothes with him. As the judge had a very good suit on, the man had no reason to object. Accordingly the judge shifted himself from top to toe, and put on a complete suit of the miller's best. Armed with the miller's hat and shoes, and stick, away he marches to Chelmsford; he had procured good lodgings to his liking, and waited for the assizes that should come on next day. When the trials came on, he walked like an ignorant country-fellow backwards and forwards along the county-hall. He had a thousand eyes within him, and when the court began to fill, he soon found out the poor fellow that was the plaintiff. As soon as he came into the hall, the miller drew up to him:—"Honest friend, said he, how is your cause like to go day?"—"Why, replied the plaintiff, my cause is in a very precarious situation, and if I lose it, I'm ruined for life."—"Well, honest friend, friend, replied the miller, will you take my advice? I'll let you into a secret that perhaps you don't know; every Englishman has the right and privilege to except against any one juryman through the whole twelve; now do you insist upon your privilege, without giving a reason why, and, if possible, get me chosen in his room, and I'll do you all the service in my power." Accordingly, when the clerk of the court had called over the jury-men, the plaintiff excepted to one of them by name: the judge on the bench was highly offended with this liberty.—“What do you mean, says he, by excepting against that gentleman?”—“I mean, my lord, to assert my privilege as an Englishman without giving a reason why.”—The judge, who had been deeply bribed, in order to conceal it by a show of candour, and having a confidence in the superiority of his party—“Well, Sir, said he, as you claim your privilege in one instance I'll grant you a favour, who would you wish to have in the room of that man excepted against?”—After a small time taken in consideration—“My lord, says he, I wish to have an honest man chose in,” and he looks round the court—“My lord, there's that miller in the court, we'll have him if you please.” Accordingly the miller was chosen in. As soon as the clerk of the court had given them all their oaths, a little dexterous fellow came into the department, and slips ten golden Carolus's into the hands of eleven jurymen, and gave the miller but five. He observed that they were all bribed as well as himself, and said to his next neighbour, in a soft whisper, “How much have you got?” “Ten pieces,” said he. He concealed what he had himself. The cause was opened by the plaintiff's council; and all the scraps of evidence they could pick up were adduced in his favour.

The younger brother was provided with a great number of evidences and pleaders, all plentifully bribed as well as the judge. The evidence deposed, that they were in the self-same country where the brother died, and saw him buried. The counsellors pleaded upon this accumulated evidence, and every thing went with a full tide in favour of the younger brother. The judge summed up the evidence with great gravity and deliberation, and now "Gentlemen of the jury, said he, lay your heads together, and bring in your verdict as you shall deem most just." They waited but a few minutes before they determined in favour of the younger brother. The judge said, "Gentlemen, are ye agreed, and who shall speak for you?"—"We are agreed, my lord, replied one, our foreman shall speak for us."—"Hold, my lord, replied the miller, we are not all agreed."—"Why, says the judge, in a very surly manner, what's the matter with you? What reasons have you for disagreeing?"—"I have several reasons, my lord, replied the miller; the first is, they have given to all these gentlemen of the jury ten broad pieces of gold, and to me but five; besides, I have many objections to make to the false reasonings of the pleaders, and the contradictory evidence of the witnesses."—Upon this the miller began a discourse that discovered such vast penetration of understanding, such extensive knowledge of the law, and expressed with such energetic and manly eloquence that astonished the judge and the whole court. As he was going on with his powerful demonstrations, the judge in a surprise of soul stopped him—"Where did you come from, and who are you?"—"I came from Westminster-Hall, replied the miller, my name is Matthew Hale, I am Lord Chief Justice of the King's-Bench. I have observed the iniquity of your proceedings this day, and therefore come down from a seat which you are no ways worthy to hold. You are one of the corrupt parties in this iniquitous business. I'll come up this moment, and try the cause all over again. Accordingly Sir Matthew went up with his miller's dress and hat on, began with the trial from its very original—searched every circumstance of truth and falsehood—evinced the eldest brother's title to the estate, from the contradictory evidence of the witnesses, and the false reasonings of the pleaders—unravelled all the sophistry to the very bottom, and gained a complete victory in favour of Truth and Justice.

VICTORIOUS POWER of FRIENDSHIP,

*Exemplified in the Conduct of DAMON and PYTHIAS.
Tully's Offices, and Brooke's Fool of Quality.*

WHEN Damon was sentenced by Dionysius of Syracuse to die on a certain day, he begged permission in the interim to retire to his own country, to set the affairs of his disconsolate family in order. This the tyrant intended peremptorily to refuse, by granting it, as he conceived, on the impossible condition of his procuring some one to remain as hostage for his return under equal forfeiture of life. Pythias heard the condition, and did not wait for an application upon the part of Damon—he instantly offered himself as security for his friend, which being accepted, Damon was immediately set at liberty. The king and all the courtiers were astonished at this action; and therefore when the day of execution drew near, his majesty had the curiosity to visit Pythias in his confinement. After some conversation on the subject of friendship, in which the Tyrant delivered it as his opinion, that self-interest was the sole mover of human actions; as for virtue, friendship, benevolence, love of one's country, and the like, he looked upon them as terms invented by the wise to keep in awe and impose upon the weak:—“My Lord,” said Pythias, with a firm voice and noble aspect, “I would it were possible that I might suffer a thousand deaths rather than my friend should fail in any article of his honour. He cannot fail therein, my lord, I am as confident of his virtue as I am of my own existence. But I pray, I beseech the Gods to preserve the life and integrity of my Damon together ; oppose him ye winds, prevent the eagerness and impatience of his honourable endeavours, and suffer him not to arrive, till by my death I have redeemed a life a thousand times of more consequence, of more value, than my own ; more estimable to his lovely wife, to his precious little innocents, to his friends, and to his country. O leave me not to die the worst of deaths in my Damon."—Dionysius was awed and confounded by the dignity of these sentiments and by the manner in which they were uttered ; he felt his heart struck by a slight sense of invading truth ; but it served rather to perplex than deceive him. The fatal day arrived, Pythias was brought forth, and walked amidst the guards with a serious but satisfied air to the place of execution. Dionysius was already there ; he was exalted on a moving throne, that was drawn by six white horses, and sat pensive and attentive to the prisoner. Pythias came, he vaulted high on the scaffold, and beholding for some time the apparatus of his death, he turned with a placid countenance and addressed the spectators : " My prayers are heard," he cried, " the Gods are propitious ; you know, my friends, that the winds have been contrary till yesterday. Damon could not come ; he could not conquer impossibilities ; he will be here to-morrow, and the blood which is shed to-day shall have ransomed the life of my friend. O ! could I erase from your bosoms every doubt, every mean suspicion of the honour of the man for whom I am about to suffer, I should go to my death even as I would to my bridal. Be it sufficient in the mean time, that my friend will be found noble, that his truth is unimpeachable, that he will speedily prove it, that he is now on his way, hurrying on, accusing himself, the adverse elements, and the Gods ; but I haste to prevent his speed : executioner, do your office." As he pronounced the last words, a buz began to rise among the remotest of the people ; a distant voice was heard, the crowd caught the the words, and stop, stop the execution, was repeated by the whole assembly : a man came at full speed ; the throng gave way to held approach : he was mounted on a steed of foam : in an instant he was off his horse, on the scaffold, and his Pythias straitly embraced—" You are safe, he cried, you are safe, my friend, my beloved friend, the Gods be praised you are safe ! I now have nothing but death to suffer, and am delivered from the anguish of those reproaches which I gave myself for having endangered a life so much dearer than my own." Pale, cold, and half speechless, in the arms of his Damon, Pythias replied in broken accents—" Fatal haste ! cruel impatience ! What envious powers have wrought impossibilities in your favour ?—But I will not be wholly disappointed—Since I cannot die to save, I will not survive you !" Dionysius heard, beheld, and considered all with astonishment. His heart was touched, he wept, and leaving his throne, he ascended the scaffold. " Live, live ye incomparable pair !" he cried, " ye have borne unquestionable testimony to the existence of virtue ; and virtue equally evinces the existence of a God to reward it ! Live happy, live renowned ! and O form me by your precepts as ye have invited me by your example, to be worthy of the participation of so sacred a friendship."

The DIVINITY and JUSTICE of CHRISTDisplayed in punishing DECEIT and PERJURY.

Exemplified in the Case of AMURATH, the EMPEROR of the TURKS, and ULADISLAUS, the PRINCE of HUNGARY.

From DR. COTTON MATHER'S HISTORY OF NEW ENGLAND, intituled MAGNALIA CHRISTI AMERICANA.—Folio.

AFTER the most solemn engagements in writing, and oaths in which the Turkish Emperor swore upon the Alcoran, and the German Popish prince swore upon the New Testament, the emperor was lull'd asleep in security. The Pope sent his Legate to absolve the Hungarian Prince from his oath and covenant, and he invaded the Turkish dominions with an army of well disciplined men. The Turkish emperor was roused from his lethargy, and got together a number of raw troops quite unprepared for action : the consequence was, his troops were routed, and he had the mortification to see them fly from the field of battle. It is difficult to describe or conceive of the conflict of passions that must be working in his breast ! With a mixture of rage and despair he plucked out the parchment covenant from his bosom, which had been signed and sworn to by the Hungarian prince—he held it with his right hand up to Heaven, and uttered these striking words:—

 “ O Jesus, these are thy Christians, who have perfidiously broke their solemn oath and covenant by invading my dominions : if thou art a God, as thy Christians say thou art, I demand a display of thy justice, to decide in the most conspicuous manner who is the aggressor upon this occasion, and I desire that thy vengeance may appear accordingly.”—
 Christ Jesus heard his appeal, and as the God of the universe he answered his demand : the Turkish troops were inspired with new valour—they faced about and fought like lions—they routed the Hungarian army—they killed Uladislaus and the pope's legate upon the field of battle, and gained a complete victory.

This is one proof out of millions, that Christ is “ God over all, blessed for evermore.”

For the preceding CHARACTERS and ANECDOTES.

THE CONTRAST.

VIEW the unthinking and irreligious part of the female sex, either as coquette or prude, striving to draw admirers after them. The pride of life, the lust of the eye, and the lust of the flesh, branching forth in all the ostentatious vanities and follies of the day, attract their whole souls. The toilet, their persons and conquests, the assembly, the ball, the table, opera's and plays, steal both day and night from them. Swiftly flying on the wings of time, the moment big with their fate is trifled with, is disregarded, and the gratification of their different desires only attended to.

Observe them as wedded. Their husbands are despised; their children neglected; and their gallants caressed. The commotion of passion raised at the card-table; the continual dissipation of spirits at routs; other amusements and unmeaning visits; the frequency of assignations; the checks of conscience; and if not quite hardened, the fear of detection, destroy the most pleasing form and beautiful face which nature ever produced. Instead of the native bloom, heightened by the modest blush and chaste smile, see Art stepping in with all his auxiliary patchings and paintings, vainly endeavouring to outvie Nature, and ornament the premature ruins of beauty.

Amidst all, can we conceive it possible that they should be seen at church? Yes. Because they have souls? No. To keep up the form and appearance of religion; and, like a person's taking an airing to create a greater zest and relish for the amusements of the evening. Be not deceived, God is not mocked: what a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

Conscience flying in the face, they resolve to become seriously religious, affectionate wives, good mothers, and useful members of society, when hoary time shall sanction the resolution. But see! what ghastly figure is that standing close behind the fair resolver with a dart dart in his hand, terrificly grinning, and at the moment of her vain resolution, sideways striking the envenomed arrow through the liver? She falls a corps! Where are all her resolutions?

Behold how many at the ball, the opera, the play, the rout, the card-table, and in meditating assignations, are arrested by the terrific hand of death, before the resolution to reform can be put in execution!

Where can the trembling naked soul flee? where is its refuge? where its comforts? Those things which used to delight, surround it with tantalizing invitations to enjoyment; and lo, all is a shadow. The realities are remorse, horrors of conscience, and the terrors of the offended and unreconciled God; whose flaming wrath surrounds the soul, and the tormentor Satan conveys it to the eternal abyss of torment, misery, and woe. O! that mortals would consider while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when they shall say, we have no pleasure in them. O! that they would flee to the arms of the adorable and merciful SAVIOUR CHRIST, for pardon, peace, and everlasting Salvation. He is ever ready to receive the returning sinner, however laden with sin, and burdened with guilt. Come unto him then, O thou sin-sick and heavy-laden soul! Now is the accepted time, now is the day of Salvation! What keeps you back? Is there no Balm in Gilead? Is there no Physician there? Yes, there is the ALMIGHTY SAVIOUR, JESUS CHRIST the LORD, whose blood cleanseth from all sin; who cloaths the naked with the garment of Salvation, and feeds the hungry and helpless with the bread of Eternal Life.

Contrast the real Christian with those whom we have been speaking of. Observe the difference. Possessed of true faith in her crucified SAVIOUR, she is adorned with meekness, and all the graces of the Spirit. You find in her a most amiable pattern in every relative and social virtue. With what sweet affection does she attract the heart of her husband, softening his cares; and and bringing up their children in the nurture and admonition of the LORD!

Embracing in her views the good of all mankind, according to the sphere of life in which she moves, she adorns the doctrine of GOD her SAVIOUR, JESUS CHRIST, in all things. Cloathed with humility, and filled with gratitude, IMMANUEL with his victories is her most pleasing and constant theme. If rich, her heart is open, her hand is liberal. If poor, deserving nothing, yet in her LORD CHRIST meriting every thing, it is her soul's desire to be content; knowing that his watchful and wise Providence doth all things well. Having nothing, yet in her JESUS, the only Treasurer of Heaven and Earth, possessing all things, she thankfully receives whatever He sees good to give or withhold. If trouble surrounds, or temptation assails, she has her ALMIGHTY SAVIOUR to go to. She finds in him an all-powerful, yet the sweetest, most sympathizing, and faithful bosom-friend, to whom she can at all times reveal her every thought, and unburden her whole soul; open her every grief, and lay before Him her every great and little trouble. Patiently waiting for deliverance from, or for strength to bear affliction, she even keeps this word in view, that all things work together for good to them that love GOD. Fear may alarm, but her confidence is fixed on the Rock of Ages, and of her Salvation. Nothing either in life, sickness, or death, can materially injure her. Desertion and clouds may arise, but the Sun of Righteousness soon dispels them. Having fought the good fight, finished her course, and kept the faith; instead of torment, Death opens to her view and enjoyment, the Crown of Righteousness, with eternity of peace and unutterable happiness!

How amiable does the life of a truly serious Christian appear at this time in many, very many females of every rank; and particularly in the review of the Life of the late Countess Dowager of Huntingdon; who, in humble imitation of her LORD CHRIST, went about doing doing good both to the bodies and souls of men ! The high * and the low, the rich and the poor †, according to their various cases, experienced the truly Christian, benign, and philanthropic effusions of her heart.

A. B.

* The Countess of Huntingdon being very much esteemed by the late Princess Dowager of Wales was often in her private company. Ever having the glory of her Master Christ, and the good of the soul in view, Lady Huntingdon would frequently converse with her Royal Highness concerning the fall of man, his state by nature, his utter inability of doing any thing towards restoring himself to the favour of God, and the necessity of a Mediator, setting forth the inimitableness of Jesus Christ, God and man in one person, as the only Day's-Man and Saviour possibly capable in any point of view of reconciling God to man and man to God. Once in particular, as reason began to dawn on the Heir-Apparent (His present Majesty) and while he was standing by his Royal Mother, Lady Huntingdon's conversation struck her so forcibly, that with the tender care of an affectionate parent, she called on her son to note, to remember it; anxiously wishing that the mind born to govern, might be formed to religion, virtue, and honour. The effects of which maternal care amiably appear in our Most Gracious Sovereign.

† "Before Lady Huntingdon built her Chapel at Brighthelmston, it was her custom to go to the poor peoples' houses, and talk to them about the salvation of their precious souls. The first opportunity her Ladyship had of this kind, in that place, was the following: A poor soldier's wife was brought to bed of twins, and in very great distress. Lady Huntingdon went to her, and after administering relief to her bodily wants, told her she had much greater wants than those; and no sooner did her Ladyship begin to speak of her state by nature, and the imminent danger of her soul, than she burst into tears, under a sense of sin, and desiring to hear more of the one thing needful. Her Ladyship repeated her visits: and as her apartment adjoined to a public bake-house, the people that came to the oven listened at the cracks of the partition with the greatest curiosity and solemn attention. This being noised abroad, many poor women desired the privilege of attending her Ladyship; when her method was to converse with them about the one thing needful, to read and expound the scriptures and pray with them. Upon one of these occasions, (Mr. or) Master Wall, as he was called, thinking he should like, out of curiosity, to hear what her Ladyship had to say, by some means or other got admittance into a corner of the room. When she saw him, she was much surprised; but how was her soul delighted, when she found that the word of exhortation was applied to his heart by the power of the Holy Ghost! so that from that day he became a monument of Grace, and was in all respects a new creature. The passage her Ladyship was explaining at that time was this---For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory.---2 Cor. iii. 9." 2d Vol. of the Rev.
